

BANJO'S BIG Adventure

Hidden down a backstreet in a city near you is the Robinson Street Shelter.

The shelter is home to every type of animal you can imagine, living side by side like one big, noisy family.

Until recently, a little orange cat called Banjo lived there too.

Banjo loved living at the shelter, but he had always wanted to be an explorer. Every evening, he'd look at maps and think about all the wonderful things that must lie beyond Robinson Street.

One day, all the animals got together to tell him that, although they would miss him very much, they thought it was time for Banjo to have some adventures. Their faith in him made him feel brave- and excited too. The time had finally come for Banjo to see the world!

Before he left, he promised he'd send letters back home and stuck a special map on the wall so that his friends could follow along with his journey.

With a backpack full of profiteroles and a special cat-sized typewriter, he set off.

And ever since that day, Banjo's paws haven't been still for one moment! Right now, he's probably on a beach, up a mountain or deep in a jungle, having lots of fun and learning about our amazing planet. Whatever he is doing and wherever he is, he never forgets to write letters to his friends at the shelter. Perhaps one day he'll write you a letter too!

Happy travels, Banjo Robinson!

